

The Game's Afoot

Dinner and Murder. Doesn't sound like they go together, does it? Well, you could not be more wrong.

I had the pleasure of going to The Palace Theater today for The Game's Afoot, with my daughter. The moment you arrive, you feel like a part of whatever you're going to go see. The Theater was decorated in a Murder Mystery theme, and it made me totally pumped to get in there and see it. It was great to see people standing in front of the decoration for photo opportunities. There seemed to be no age left behind today, from young adult to mature adult, we were all there to have a great time!

But first, the food. The servers were very friendly and brought us our drinks right away. Then came the most wonderful, fresh salad. I really didn't want it to end. A video was shown to highlight the upcoming season. That was a great transition to our lunch. This was delicious as well with a vegetable medley, whodunnit sweet BBQ short ribs and risotto.

Then the real fun began. Right away, you got to know the characters of this play that's based in the 1930's. I don't want to give away all of the details, but I'll tell you a few key things that I loved. At first you think these actors are way over the top. You realize that they are actors playing actors. Right away, you find out the storyline of why they're all together. Between the crazy mother, her eccentric son and their friends, it's entertaining for the audience to try and guess which of them may be a murderer. Did I mention this is a comedy? I found myself snorting from laughter at the last scene before intermission.

I felt like I was attending a big Broadway production. This cast was very enjoyable to watch and I hope to watch them in other productions at The Palace Theater.

We upgraded our dessert to their ice cream with cookies, and that was a great choice! The table next to us did the same when they saw how delicious ours looked!

I hope you go, and laugh until you cry, like I did. Overall a great experience from the moment I arrived until the moment I left.
